Charles Chaplin: My Autobiography (1964) I was born on 16 April 1889, at eight o’clock at night, in East Lane, Walworth. Soon after, we moved to West Square, St George’s Road, Lambeth. According to Mother my world was a happy one. Our circumstances were moderately comfortable; we lived in three tastefully furnished rooms.

His first film is 100 years old as of 2014. Chaplin's comedies are timeless, and are just as great today as when they first entertained audiences worldwide a century ago. Chaplin completed his autobiography at the age of 75. In the first several chapters, he describes his childhood years in great detail. (It's amazing how much he was able to remember, so many years later!) He lived with his brother and mother, who had divorced his alcoholic father before Charlie was born. His mother earned a ...

My Autobiography has to be read by all who are interested in the movies, but it is far from the contribution to film history it should have been, or that Chaplin could have made it had he so desired. And it is not likely to be read rewardingly by the general public, for, judged as a literary production, it is a casual and even lazy piece of work, and bears many evidences of having been dictated by a man who either doesn't know himself or is unwilling to reveal the man he knows himself to be.

I then saw this book "Charles Chaplin My Autobiography" and bought it out of curiosity and for something to read on the Tube-not expecting very much. I was was completely wrong. It is brilliant so well written and the way Charlie writes is so vivid & engaging. He clearly was often very interested in the people he met and what motivated them and the situations in which he found himself. It ...
